MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

2017 was marked by strong economic growth in almost all geographical areas. Eurozone was finally the driver of this trend, showing a growth of around 2.4% which reaches record high since 2008. There are many triggering factors. If some central banks ended their unconventional monetary policy (Bank of Canada, Fed, BoE), a lot will stay accommodating for a good part of 2018 despite good economic indicators (ECB). The question investors must look at is the impact this economic growth will have on inflation. Indeed, the weak price indexes allow central bankers to avoid any question relative to a quicker exit of quantitative easing in their speeches. Inflation forecasts followed a constant growth in 2017, but the recent rise in commodity prices could accelerate this trend.

Regarding our investments in equities, we have implemented 8 long term themes: millennials (Amazon, SAP, Just Eat), externalisation (Elis, Sodexo, Microfocus), innovation (Valeo, Lanxess), security (Prosegur, Wavestone), new managers (Axa, Leonil), yield stocks (Eutelsat, Enel), Eurozone recovery (Nexans, Jost), strong brand (Swatch, Henkel, LVMH). We continue the stock picking to select the right investments within these themes.

Short term themes were implemented throughout the year, especially investments in the banking and the Oil & Gas sectors, more correlated with interest rates movements and oil price respectively. This last theme was strengthened towards the end of the year (Total, Pioneer Natural Resources).

During the year, equity exposure moved between 14.5% and 27%, to be at 21.5% at the end of the year (which represents 45% of the risk).

Regarding our bond portfolio: we maintained with conviction our investments in hybrids bonds (15.5% in financial subordinated debts, 11.5% insurance subordinated debts and 16.3% on corporate hybrids). We think investment grade or high yield bonds are less interesting at the moment. Peripheral bonds are still partly hedged, and in this category, we prefer Portugal (6.3% of the portfolio at year-end).
